Re: FCC proceedings on net neutrality

Dear FCC

I am writing in strong support of strict net neutrality laws. The extraordinary vitality of the current internet has everything to do with the fact that all content providers, regardless of size, money or power, are playing on an even footing. Internet providers should be free to charge the end user anything they want as long as there is market competition for their services. They should not be allowed to accept money (i.e. bribes) from rich content providers in exchange for enhanced access to consumers.

Sincerely,
